children, who he said should learn more from nature.

“Now children don't know how to deal with a fire or how to use a knife properly, but they know how to type on computer keyboards,” he said. “Can children get anything out of sitting and watching videos for four or five hours? Nothing. Kids can never grow up (into well-balanced individuals) like that.”

“The more popular my film becomes, the longer kids watch my videos. I am in a serious dilemma,” Miyazaki said. “Who is going to put the brake on this trend? If we fail, children will lose touch with reality more and more.”

“It does not matter if share prices rise or fall, but we have to have a strong intention to help children have a sense of balance. This is the most important issue facing this country,” he said.

Miyazaki was vague about future projects, saying only: “I have had various ideas. But the future course will depend on various conditions.”

Spirited Away is the story of a 10-year-old girl named Chihiro who, after traveling through a tunnel, suddenly finds herself working in a hot spring resort catering to spirits and gods, where she has to save her parents.

It was the first time an animated film has won the top prize in Berlin, one of Europe's three top film festivals along with Venice and Cannes.

The film has set box-office records in Japan, selling more than 22 million tickets since it opened last July. It is expected to be shown elsewhere in Europe and the United States shortly.
